The Estates at Cedarday

LEARN ABOUT THE SERVICES YOUR COMMUNITY HAS TO OFFER

Harford County is a community that celebrates small town living, yet has all the conveniences of an urban setting. The community here encourages cherished traditions and warm relationships with neighbors.

Here at the Estates at Cedarday one can enjoy the relaxing setting of rolling hills, forests, and parks. The community is situated next to nearly 120 acres of conservation areas and encompasses part of Bynum Run, which provides a tranquil stream right in your own neighborhood.

The rural and urban mix in Harford County offers a unique contrast between wide-open farm fields, beautiful rivers, state parks, and forests and the conveniences of a modern thriving city—all set in an area rich in history and tradition.

Harford County is located in northeastern Maryland where the Susquehanna River meets the Chesapeake Bay. With approximately 520 square miles of land and water and 5,000 years of history, Harford County's first inhabitants were the Susquehannock and Massawomek tribes.

Harford County, Maryland, was discovered in 1608 by famed Captain John Smith (of the Pocahontas legend). The area was mapped out and was included as part of Baltimore County. The first settlement was believed to have been established in 1622. In 1744, the area was divided and Harford County was named for Henry Harford, the son of the last Lord of Baltimore, Frederick Calvert.

In 1782, the citizens of Harford County voted to move the center of the government to the newly formed town of Bel Air, due to its convenient location. Bel Air was a plot of land laid out by the Scott family in 1780 on their farm Scott's Old Fields.

The Estates at Cedarday brings luxurious living to this attractive rural setting. With a rich history and sense of tradition, Harford County is a close-knit community that remains true to its roots. Its convenient location near Baltimore, Washington, Delaware, and Philadelphia—combined with its own fabulous amenities and excellent schools and shopping—truly makes The Estates at Cedarday the ideal place to call home.
