THE RESERVE AT TRIADELPHIA CROSSING

Maintaining a true sense of community is vital as we move farther into the 21st century, and nowhere is the opportunity to be part of a community more appealing than in Howard County, Maryland.

Howard County is an area of contrasts. It is both rural and urban, a place where vistas of rolling green hills, wide farm fields, and beautiful rivers and forests exist in harmony with thriving cities and industry.

Early settlers—from the late 1600s—were farmers; tobacco was the basis of their economy. Commerce and industry weren't far behind, however, with Howard County's rivers providing water power and a port at Elk Ridge Landing, with a navigable channel on the Patapsco River to the Chesapeake Bay, along which residents shipped local iron ore and tobacco.

Because most people were farmers, they lived in rural settings scattered about the countryside, with only a minority living in towns. That changed after the Civil War, when Howard County's first deeply rooted communities emerged. The 1878 Maryland Directory presented a flattering description of the area:

This county is very undulating and the soil mostly good...with considerable fine limestone land...a large amount of excellent water powers, which are mostly improved by factories, mill, furnaces, etc. Inexhaustible quarries of granite exist in the county. Howard has 31 miles of the B&O Railroad on one side and 12 miles of the Washington branch on the southeast...This accessibility with the eminent natural advantages of pure air and water...are promoting improvements and the vicinity of the railroads is being built up with fine country seats.

Originally part of Anne Arundel County, the area was designated the Howard District in 1839, in honor of John Eager Howard, statesman, soldier, and fifth governor of Maryland. Howard County became the 21st of Maryland's 23 counties in 1851, with the county seat at Ellicott Mills. Many distinguished statesmen and leaders, including four Maryland governors (George Howard, T. Watkins Ligon, John Lee Carroll, and Edwin Warfield) have called Howard County home.

The name The Reserve at Triadelphia Crossing derives from the adjacent Triadelphia Reservoir, with its own fascinating history. What was once the town of Triadelphia now stands 50 feet under the calm surface of this body of water. Several buildings remain from this old village that stood in Montgomery County but shared a Howard County post office. It was founded in 1809 by three brothers-in-law—Isaac Briggs, Caleb Bentley, and Thomas Moore—who all married daughters of Roger Brooke; hence the name Triadelphia, which means “the three brothers.” Carroll Dulaney in the New Post related the fact that Moore, one of Triadelphia's founders, had invented the icebox in 1803 and patented it. At that time, it was used to carry butter on horseback to Alexandria, Virginia. A flour, grist, and sawmill operated here, though floods in 1868 and 1889 destroyed the village.

Today, the community of The Reserve at Triadelphia Crossing carries on the tradition of a beautifully landscaped crossroads in a picturesque Howard County setting. Its close proximity to the Baltimore and Washington areas and combination of excellent schools, superb shopping, and pristine country setting make The Reserve at Triadelphia Crossing an ideal place to live.

Welcome to The Reserve at Triadelphia Crossing!
